Customs—The Art of Dressing Becomingly and Cheaply.

ERELY as a preliminary, let me show a g en u in e Directoire gown, as worn on the stage and occasionally seen at a costume ball. This Josephine style of dress, of course, should be affected by the affe to be pretty is left bare. The spreading points of the collar suggests breadth in the right place, and, therefore, emphasizes the trim slenderness of the waist. The double bedies contover a vest allows for skillful rounding of the figure, if Elise rounds it instead of nature. The illustration takes every possible advantage of Directoire possibilities in this way. It will be observed that the vest opens back into collars that lie against the lapels of the coat proper. The fall of lace in front carries out the idea of lace filling, though of course we are glad it is abbreviated to show the full white neck. The ugliest arm need not betray itself in these sleeves, which in themselves are delightfully piquant. I saw the dress in cream satin, the coat lined with a color which contrasted with the plain cream and harmonized with the brilliant striping of the vest. The lace used was very rich and fine. One advantage which this dress presents is that if your season should not see you

settled, whyl you can fill up the throat of the bodice, set the cuffs down to the wrists, supply sleeves and wear the waist for the swell aft ranon, get up next summer with a cream wool skirt, paneled with cream satin. I cannot advise you to try to get your face up like this girl's, for I don't think you next summer with a cream wool skirt, panoled with cream satio. I cannot advise you to try to get your face up like this girl's, for I don't think you could do it without resorting palpably to an eyebrow pencil.

Just a word in favor of bangs, although they are all out of fashion. When the hair is in contrast to the color of the eyes and the eyobrows a bang cut just above the brows does omphasize the brilliarcy and character of the eye. Just now when everyone is showing her foreheat you may really take to yourself with advantage this hint. It is a wise girl who seizes upon a provailing fashion when it becomes her, but it is a still wiser one who takes advantage of the becomingness of a fashion left behind. She looks her best and is different from the others. That is a great point.

Consider your back before you try the next dress. It is a very elever gown, but you would dislike to get in it and miss that line down the back, wouldn't you? The idea of the dark band about the figure is French all around. Observe that the band on the sleeve does not break the circle made about the body. This gives an idea of breakth where the figure should be full. The band about the hips sets off the round waist above. The loose korchief effect above the upper ring is still a further assistance to a slender girl. Have you deep auburn hair? Make the dress of tulle and silk; have the dress of tulle and silk; have the bands velvet; let the flowered the bands velvet; let the nowered front of the skirt be tulle and the passion flowers in their own colors, the tulle be the lightest shade of flowers. Use the other shades in silk, and catch the suggestion of red in the velvet. Your skin nuss dead white, your lips searlet, a yes deep gray or pansy, and your the heavy red I spoke ef. I think that, combined with a passion fle dress, ought to settle you. It is a not to make use of natural combines of colors. Take my adv When you wish to get fine and sirrit offects in color—"French effects" that are called—look up tulips and pan and the roses that deepen toward conter; or, for still greater varitake a look at the birds and copy the area of the colors as cloverly you may be able to.

I should also wear green undreskid slippers, with a wild rose on e and wear pink stockings, with gembroidered thickly on them. In cars I would have pink consuced rein my hair a rose or two, and I she not care in the least how close might be, nor how well the other looked.—Daisy Dart, in Chikledger.
